Consultation-Liaison Psychiatry/ Psychosomatic Medicine

Psychosomatic Medicine is a board certified sub-specialty of psychiatry where psychiatrists are dedicated to the treatment of individuals with co-occurring psychiatric and general medical conditions. Dr. Schwartz has received specialized training in working with medically ill and/or medically compromised children, adolescents, and adults who also suffer from a co-occurring mental health condition. As a result, Dr. Schwartz is experienced in the complex psychopharmacologic treatment of patients with medical illnesses who need mental health treatment. Since most patients with medical ailments receive medication for their condition, it is important to have both knowledge and experience in the prescribing and psychotherapeutic treatment of patients with such co-occurring conditions.

Eating Disorders

An eating disorder is a medical/psychiatric condition that requires treatment from health care professionals who are trained in this specialty. Often, the treatment approach includes a coordination of various professionals including psychiatrists, primary care physicians, psychotherapists, and nutritionists, all who have clinical experience in the treatment of eating disorders. Perhaps the best way to understand an eating disorder is to appreciate the conditions that effect one's thoughts, behaviors, and emotions.
